Bern Meat Going Strong For Half Century After What Was Humorous Beginning

It was more than 50 years ago on the school bus, Nancy Miller heard from classmates that her parents had “bought the locker.”

Looking back to that day with humor, Nancy said, “I was really upset. I couldn’t understand why they wanted the jail. That’s what I thought was meant.”

Come to find out, her parents purchased the livestock slaughter plant in Bern. “People often refer to a local meat processor as ‘the locker,’ because of the frozen storage compartments,” Nancy clarified. “My folks bought the plant to supplement our farm.”

Longtime advertiser on 580 WIBW, Bern Meat Plant, Inc., at Bern, Kansas, in Nemaha County, just south of the Nebraska border, has thrived since that memorable beginning.

“Now, my husband, Terry, and our son, Tim, and our capable staff operate Bern Meat,” Nancy verified.

Custom processing of livestock for producers from a large area, Bern Meat is also known for sales of high quality meat and specialty products throughout the Midwest.

“We really appreciate our loyal local customers and our large clientele who come from a considerable distance to buy meat from us,” Nancy commented.

Seasoned sausage, jerky and beef sticks made from Terry’s personal recipes are popular products.
